Collaboration is the name of the game these days, right FLiPs? Check out this new one -- it's a first-of-its-kind collaboration of philanthropic funders, practitioners, researchers and others designed to make it easier for top-performing social programs to expand widely to communities that need them.

The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, Growth Philanthropy Network and Duke University recently announced The Social Impact Exchange ("The Exchange") -- a cross-sector, member-driven group that will act as a focal point for studying, funding and implementing large expansions of proven social purpose organizations -- will also hold a yearly competition to identify programs with the highest impact and readiness to grow, and support them with financial and consulting awards, the strategic partners said.
